What's trending in water?!

We were curious what people were Google searching relative to water and what we found were some pretty interesting queries. Here are the top 5 weird water searches!

1. Does lettuce water help you sleep? You can thank TikTok for this trend! Lettuce water is just lettuce leaves (the leaf type, not iceberg) in hot water, steeped, leaves removed and drink up. Lettuce leaves are high in lactucin and lactucarium, which makes you sleepy, relieves mild pain, and promotes relaxation. Here's an actual scientific article on the connection between lettuce and sleep: Food Science and Biotechnology. Alternatively, you can just eat a lot of lettuce...

2. Does water have calories? Nope! Calories only come from carbs, proteins and fats. Remember to stay hydrated this summer and drink calorie-free water!
3. Is it safe to drink water from the bathroom sink? In the US, generally the water in your bathroom is the same as the water at your kitchen sink. If you're using a point of use filter in the kitchen to purify the water that would be the only difference but the occasional drink from the bathroom tap isn't going to hurt anyone. Now if you're visiting the UK it's a different story! With older buildings there's an increased frequency of lead pipes, a problem that is commonly treated in the kitchen but not necessarily the rest of the house. UK bathrooms could also be supplied by cisterns, which opens up a whole new set of contaminants.
4. What does water taste like? It's not quite as strange a question as you might think. The taste of water changes by region because of different mineral content and how it is treated. If you're not happy with the taste or smell of your tap water we have solutions for that!
5. Siri, how do I eject water from my iPhone? Ah, summer when people are constantly dropping their phones in pools and lakes... There are apps that generate an ultra low 165Hz frequency sound wave that propels moisture out from the speaker cavity system after accidental contact with water. Click here for a video. Ask The Expert

Question:

What kind of maintenance does a radon system need?

Answer:

Radon systems don't need much maintenance. Make these visual checks and retesting part of your regular home maintenance:

- If you have overhanging trees you may need to clear the fan of debris occasionally or trim the trees!
- Check that any caulking or sealed sump pits in the basement are still intact.
- Make a regular check of the manometer gauge on the vent pipe to make sure that the system is operating as designed.
- Retest the radon in air levels every 3 to 5 years.
